From the Desk of Fr. Leo

Jesus was raised in Northern Palestine in Galilee, in the agricultural country far removed from the noisy imperial city of Jerusalem in the south. In recruiting His apostles; He chose Galileans; with the exception of Judas, who came from Kerioth in Judea.

Many of these young men were called from their fishing boats off the Sea of Galilee. During their years of apprenticeship, they learned to give speeches, manage huge crowds and adjust gradually to an entirely different mode of life. Each morning they would awaken expecting new and fascinating events, orchestrated by their miracle working Leader.

Together they traveled the entire length of the country, and became familiar with Jerusalem and its massive Temple, protecting stone wall and winding streets. They learned the ways of the Scribes, Pharisees and Sadducees, with their varied political, legal and religious leanings. But always they walked in and were shielded by the lengthening shadow of their fearless Master.

When Jesus was captured, they suddenly found themselves frightened and weak. Fear of the volatile Jerusalem mob caused Peter to utter, "I swear, I don't know the man." Judas also, pulled more by avarice than loyalty, here decided to end his life in suicide. It was this same city with its vying tensions and frenzied crowds that brought Jesus to his painful death.

Now in the Gospel this Sunday, that all seems to be far behind them. The young men from Galilee are back on their favorite lake, doing what they did three years earlier - fishing those blue, enchanted waters. It was almost as though they had never left, but the first chapter of Christianity had been written and they had witnessed every move.

Chapter two begins on this warm spring morning with the risen Jesus calling them from the fishing boats for the second time. He invites them to breakfast on the beach with a calm pastoral setting as a background. Here they are asked to make their commitments as leaders of the newly founded Church. Their baptisms have been completed and confirmation day is only a few weeks away. They must decide, once and for all, between the Church and the fishing boat.

We see St. Peter making his triple profession of love and hear his future fate of crucifixion. The others also pledge their lifelong loyalty to Jesus and once again the abandoned fishing boats are left tied to the piers. Soon they will leave their beloved north country for their fiery Pentecostal confirmation in Jerusalem, then on to their mission - wise, Spirit-filled and beyond intimidation.
